Relaxing steam

New CPC procedure fine-tunes oversight

The Communist Party of China has issued a revised regulation to improve supervision and governance of its more than 90 million members.

Shifting its focus from fighting corruption, the Party rule and party members are now required to monitor, warn against and fight systemic risks and financial regulations.

The regulation was put into practice on Friday, with emphasis on the rule of the Party, the core leadership of the CPC Central Committee, the core leadership of the CPC, and the CPC is always the first and most to clarify the core function of the CPC.

The regulation clearly stipulates that “political supervision should be deepened, and inspections should focus on upholding the Party leadership, improving the Party's organization, strengthening the Party's construction, and advancing comprehensive and strict rule of the Party.”

The inspections should deeply analyze the scope of the Party leadership and its central role in the leadership group of the CPC.

The regulation was first put into practice on a trial basis in 2009. The latest innovative practices stipulate that “political supervision should be deepened, and inspections should focus on upholding the Party leadership, improving the Party's organization, strengthening the Party's construction, and advancing comprehensive and strict rule of the Party.”

The inspections should deeply analyze the scope of the Party leadership and its central role in the leadership group of the CPC. The CPC is always the first and most to clarify the core function of the CPC, it said.

The regulation was first put into practice on a trial basis in 2009. The latest innovative practices stipulate that “political supervision should be deepened, and inspections should focus on upholding the Party leadership, improving the Party's organization, strengthening the Party's construction, and advancing comprehensive and strict rule of the Party.”

The inspections should deeply analyze the scope of the Party leadership and its central role in the leadership group of the CPC. The CPC is always the first and most to clarify the core function of the CPC, it said.

The regulation was first put into practice on a trial basis in 2009. The latest innovative practices stipulate that “political supervision should be deepened, and inspections should focus on upholding the Party leadership, improving the Party's organization, strengthening the Party's construction, and advancing comprehensive and strict rule of the Party.”

The inspections should deeply analyze the scope of the Party leadership and its central role in the leadership group of the CPC. The CPC is always the first and most to clarify the core function of the CPC, it said.