Jilin a hot spot for cold fun

By Li Fusheng
Jilin a hot spot for cold fun

Jilin is home to people of different ethnic groups, such as Han, Korean, and Mongol, who have kept their traditional way of life. Winter carnivals have been held in the provincial capital Changchun and Jilin, hailed as one of China’s top natural wonders.

Tourists participate in a sledging competition. Riding a sled is a traditional pastime in rural areas of Northeast China.

Ice fishing, a traditional event, has become a popular attraction among tourists.

Ice, snow culture sets province apart

By Cao BaoMing

Ice, snow culture sets province apart

The snowy period can stretch for months in Jilin, as the region is known for its soft rime, which is hailed as one of China’s top natural wonders. Rime is ice crystals that condense on tree branches when the water vapor from warmer parts meets the cold air. The most beautiful soft rime is found along the Songhua River in downtown Jilin, where the water vapor in the section easily freezes through out the winter. The province’s long winter also makes it a prime spot for skiing. The snowy period can last from some 150 days, with the first snow usually falling in late October and the last in early April. Winter carnivals have been held in recent years to combine leisure activities with the local way of life. Like a home to people of different ethnic groups, such as Han, Korean, and Mongol, who have kept their traditional way of life. Winter carnivals have been held in the provincial capital Changchun, hailed as one of China’s top natural wonders.

Tourists participate in a sledging competition. Riding a sled is a traditional pastime in rural areas of Northeast China.

Ice fishing, a traditional event, has become a popular attraction among tourists.

Ice, snow culture sets province apart

By Cao BaoMing

Ice, snow culture sets province apart

The snowy period can stretch for months in Jilin, as the region is known for its soft rime, which is hailed as one of China’s top natural wonders. Rime is ice crystals that condense on tree branches when the water vapor from warmer parts meets the cold air. The most beautiful soft rime is found along the Songhua River in downtown Jilin, where the water vapor in the section easily freezes through out the winter. The province’s long winter also makes it a prime spot for skiing. The snowy period can last from some 150 days, with the first snow usually falling in late October and the last in early April. Winter carnivals have been held in recent years to combine leisure activities with the local way of life. Like a home to people of different ethnic groups, such as Han, Korean, and Mongol, who have kept their traditional way of life. Winter carnivals have been held in the provincial capital Changchun, hailed as one of China’s top natural wonders.

Tourists participate in a sledging competition. Riding a sled is a traditional pastime in rural areas of Northeast China.

Ice fishing, a traditional event, has become a popular attraction among tourists.