Rising Jinan’s Manhattan aspirations

The capital of East China’s Shandong province implements aggressive strategy to become a multifunctional economic hub.

By Ju Chuanjiang

Jinan, the capital of Shandong province, is striving to push forward the development of its high-tech industries to make them the powerhouse for the future of Jinan’s economic development. And as such, Jinan is expected to develop into a high-tech hub with a total output value of more than 1000 billion yuan ($161 billion) in the near future.

According to Jinan’s six-month plan for the development of high-tech industries, the city plans to vigorously develop high-tech industries, technology industry, electronic information industry, biopharmaceuticals, new-energy vehicles, new-energy materials, new-energy and so on. Jinan is also expected to become a financial and trade hub similar to London in the UK or Shanghai in China.

Jinan, the capital of Shandong province, is expected to become a major gathering area for the financial industry and build a national-level financial center.
