WONDERFUL YANTAI TRIP

序言

醉美之旅——仙境烟台

烟台，位于中国山东半岛东部，是中国首批十四个沿海开放城市之一。因其气候舒适、环境优越、物产丰富，屡次荣获“中国最佳休闲城市”、“中国十大幸福感城市”，更被誉为“山海仙市”。同时，烟台也是亚洲唯一的国际葡萄·葡萄酒城，是中国重点葡萄酒业发展基地。

烟台市目前有国家级经济技术开发区、高新技术产业开发区和保税港区等多项政府政策支持的新型园区，其中烟台保税港区更是中国第一家以出口加工区和临近港口整合转型升级形成的保税港区，该区域目前拥有中国众多保税、退税、免税等政策优惠，且区域功能齐全，自开关运作以来，在促进对外贸易、出口加工等方面发挥着越来越重要的作用。

未来几年，烟台将重点突破发展海洋生物育种及高效养殖、海洋高端装备制造、海洋高技术服务业等优势特色产业，为建成中国海洋科技成果转化示范城市、中国重要海洋科技、技术先进城市不懈努力。

“亚洲媒体聚焦仙境烟台”活动于2014年6月8日至12日圆满举行。亚洲媒体记者们游览了蓬莱阁、养马岛、海滨广场等知名旅游景点；参观了张裕卡斯特酒庄、葡萄酒文化博物馆以及烟台保税港区国际进口酒类食品展示区，品鉴名品酒，感受酒文化；考察了中集来福士海洋重工、东方海洋科技、杰瑞石油、龙湖滨海生态城等国际知名企业以及高新区、东部新区发展现状与规划；参观了烟台山近代建筑群、烟台开埠馆、剪纸艺术馆等人文历史。从旅游、人文、经济、生态宜居等多角度让亚洲媒体记者体验到一个休闲宜居城市的立体形象。媒体记者们回国后，他们还用自己的笔触写了大量有关烟台的深度报道，这些摄影作品及精选报道将在本集册中一一展现。

FOREWORD

WONDERFUL YANTAI - AMAZING TRIP

Located in the east of Shandong province, Yantai is one of the coastal cities open to the world. The city has a cozy living environment and beautiful landscape. It has won titles of the Best City for Vacation and Top Ten Happy Cities. Yantai is also the country's wine production base, selling wine to the world.

The city has a bonded port area and high-tech parks. The bonded port area is the first of its kind with an industrial cluster that deals in production and import. The area offers a series of supporting policies in taxation. It plays a crucial role in the city's international trade sector.

In the future, Yantai will focus on marine economy. It will develop marine life breeding, marine facilities manufacturing and many other industries. It aims to become a leading player in marine technology and economy.

From June 8 to 12, 2014, 22 members of staff from several Asian media outlets including China Daily and The Daily Star visited Yantai, a coastal city in east China's Shandong province. Yantai is the only Asian city recognized as an International Vine and Wine City by the International Organization of Vine and Wine. The journalists visited tourist attractions including the Penglai Pavilion, one of the Four Great Towers of China, Yangma Island, the Chateau Changyu-Castel, Changyu Wine Culture Museum and the Yantai bonded area. They also went to large enterprises in Yantai during the five-day tour, including Yantai CIMC Raffles Co, Shandong Oriental Ocean Sci-tech Co and Jereh Oilfield Services Group Co.

Changyu Wine Culture Museum

Changyu Wine Co. was founded in 1892 by businessman Zhang Bibi. In 1992, a wine culture museum was set up in Zhifu district of Yantai city. The museum presents the long history of Changyu. It also shows the rise of China's wine enterprises. The Changyu Winery is the largest winery in Asia. The construction of the winery started in 1894 and finished in 1905. It covers 2,666 sq m. The winery has the country's finest design. It is now a cultural heritage and is open to tourists. But it still functions as a winery with more than 600 barrels. Among them there are seven oldest barrels with 100-year history, made of corks imported from Europe during the early years of the company. There are three barrels that can contain 15 tons of wine.

Penglai Pavilion

Penglai Pavilion is one of the four famous ancient towers in China. It was built by Zhu Chuyue, governor of Dengzhou in the 6th Year of Jiyao of the Song Dynasty (A.D.1061). It is a two-storied wooden pavilion with a double-caved roof. It's said that after eight immortals got drunk in this pavilion they started crossing the sea. In order to show their power they refused to use ships but took out their magic weapons instead. Here comes the idiom, that the Eight Immortals Showing Their Own Magic Power when Crossing the Sea, which means to show their own abilities. It's the best place to enjoy mirage.

US intelligence officials looking into suspected new spy leak

WASHINGTON — US intelligence officials were considering on Tuesday whether to ask the Department of Justice to open a criminal investigation into the suspected leak of a classified counter-terrorism document to a WikiLeaks affiliate, a US official familiar with the matter said.

The intelligence officials were preparing a statement on Tuesday regarding the incident. "The document was published by WikiLeaks on Tuesday, but because it was dated August 2013, some U.S. media reports speculate that a second leak had broken through U.S. spy agency contractor Edward Snowden had kept to avoid classified documents from inside the U.S. intelligence community to the media.

An official familiar with the matter said, however, that the government does not know for sure that a second leak took place.

The apparent leak involves information on the Terrorist Identification Database (TIDB) — the common database (CIDR) and the Terrorist Screening Database, according to the document.

African Minerals says no Ebola cases

LEWISBURG, African Minerals Ltd said no cases of the Ebola virus disease have been confirmed at its plant in Sierra Leone and that it is not in a position to test for the virus.

The company said it was closely monitoring the outbreak of the disease and had implemented measures that included access control, temperature monitoring, enhanced hygiene and covered walkways.

The Ebola outbreak first began in February in the country of Guinea. The toll there continues to rise, but the epidemic has since shifted to neighboring Liberia and Sierra Leone.

Japan's nuclear restart may be delayed until 2015

YOKOHAMA — The long-awaited restart of Japan's nuclear power plants is facing yet another setback and may be delayed until 2015, Japanese media said on Wednesday, citing pressure on strengthening safety to push for that.

Yokohama Electric Power's Fukushima Daiichi plant, located about 120 km from central Tokyo, is the first nuclear plant to be allowed to restart under tough new safety regulations since the 2011 Fukushima crisis.

The media said that the restart will be delayed until 2015, but the government has not yet decided on the restart date.

Yantai banks on new marine zone

600 square kilometer area for industry, tourism and bonded trade, Fu Chao reports.

As it works to turn Yantai into the nation's top marine economy, the municipal government is developing a sprawling new area in the port city, said Mayor Meng Fanli.

"Yantai is a place full of potential and hope. The high-tech marine new area will be the engine of the city's growth," said Meng during a recent news conference with a group of Asian media visiting Yantai.

Located in eastern China's Shandong province, Yantai city has 909 km of coastline and was one of the first 14 coastal cities to open up to the world. With a well-developed marine industrial chain, the city was recognized by the World Bank in 2006 as one of best investment environments in China.

The high-tech marine new area in the east of the city shares — and also shapes — the Yantai's appeal.

Covering some 600 sq km of five districts in the city, the new area has a 150 km coastline and a range of economic zones for emerging industries, tourism and bonded trade.

The bonded trade zone in Zhifu district serves as a hub for foreign investment, logistics and manufacturing.

Yu Huaoven, the director of the zone, said import and export volume in 2013 reached $15.74 billion, ranking first among the country's bonded trade zones.

It also has a range of imported product exhibition zones displaying wine, milk powder, food and health products. The zones' logistics facilities have been improved in recent years to fuel growth in incoming and outgoing freight. The volume reached 220 million tons last year, said Yu.

Yu Dong, head of the Yantai Municipal Bureau of Commerce, said the 230 sq km high-tech zone for new industries will be home to national marine industries, while a coastal business zone in the new area will mainly accommodate headquarters of major corporations, as well as tourism and exhibition industries.

The new area has attracted investment in real estate, tourism, marine biopharmaceuticals and logistics from more than 20 countries and regions. Among the projects, 560 each have a total investment of more than 100 million yuan ($16 million). The new area also has a variety of flourishing marine companies and world-recognized research centers including CIMC Raffles Marine Engineering Co., Shandong Oriental Ocean Sci-tech Co., Yantai Jereh Oil-field Services Group and Shandong International Biological Park.

As a national research center for the development of coastal regions, Shandong International Biological Park, there has joined the efforts of the Chinese Academy of Science, the Shandong provincial government and the Yantai municipal government. The park is also home to many projects from universities around the world.

The new area also has famed Yantai University and the Naval Aeronautical Engineering Academy.

According to Zhang Dun, deputy head of the new area's committee office, three landmarks — the Yantai Marine Property Rights Transaction Center, Marine Economy Headquarter Base and Marine Entrepreneur Services Center — will soon enter the final phase of construction.

At an investment of more than 50 billion yuan, residential and commercial complex Longhu Lake Ecological city, is also under construction.

Its first phase, a high-end residential area on renowned tourism spot Yangma Island, is finished with homes now on sale.

Zhang said that by 2020, the high-tech marine new area "will become the country's most important economic area highlighting a strong marine economy, high-tech innovation and a well-developed city".

Toast of China's wine industry

By FU CHAO
fuchao@chinadaily.com.cn

In 1892, Zhang Bishi, a successful overseas Chinese businessman in Southeast Asia, set up China's first modern winery in Yantai.

It is said that Zhang heard about the coastal city from his French friends, who said the city's climate and sunshine were perfect for a wine-producing chateau.

So Zhang started the now world-recognized Changyu Pioneer Wine Co. After 120 years the advice he received was proven wise — Yantai is now the country's largest wine production center.

The city's wine industry is booming with leading companies like Changyu and a range of emerging vintners. It is the only wine and wine city in Asia and has attracted winemakers around the world to set up chateaus.

Yi Fenghuang, head of the city's wine and wine bureau, said during a recent conference that the city has developed a comprehensive production chain from vine cultivation to bottling and trading, as well as wine culture and tourism.

Yi said that the city has 152 wine companies covering a combined 346.7 sq km. Their wine output in 2013 accounted for 28 percent of country's total, said Yi.

"With an output of 28 percent, revenues and profits were 53 percent and 67 percent respectively of the country's total. It's obvious how well the wine companies in Yantai are doing," said Yi.

Changyu's revenue before tax last year was 4.3 billion yuan ($688 million), top in the country, said Sun Jian, deputy manager of the wine company.

organizations, only two have a history of over 100 years and Changyu is the only one in Asia, said Sun.

Sun also noted that the company has six vineyards, eight chateaus and 20 factories in China. Among them, 12 factories are in Yantai.

Chateau Changyu Castel, the country's first professional winery, is located in Yantai with an "international wine city" built in 2008 and a wine culture museum.

The company is developing a new international wine city project that includes a vine and wine research center and an international trading center.

According to Yi, Yantai now has 50 chateaus including those under construction. Every year the municipal government invests 10 million yuan to support major winery projects and vineyards.

Pula Valley, one of the major projects now under construction, aims to build a chateau, vineyard cluster and a range of wine-themed recreation facilities on the hills in the city's Laishan district.

The 9 billion yuan, 24,300 sq m development will have 54 chateaus, vineyards where tourists can pick grapes, a shopping mall with wine products and exhibition area where visitors can learn about vine cultivation and wine culture.

The projects will generate 15,000 jobs for farmers, according to district officials.

Already complete is an experience center and exhibition center that offer wine tasting and lectures.

Local wine companies and chateaus are now a backbone in Yantai's economy. Chateau Changyu Castel and the 100-year cellar in the wine culture museum alone attract more than 1 million visitors every year, according to the data from the municipal government.

Fruitful partnership with HK

By JU CHUANJIANG and ZHAO RUIXUE

A delegation from Yantai is hosting a trade and investment promotion in Hong Kong from Sunday to Wednesday. They are seeking investors for 10 projects in sectors such as marine engineering, high-end services, advanced manufacturing and e-commerce.

"The new round of development brought by the transformation of the economic structure creates more opportunities for cooperation between Hong Kong and Yantai," said Yang Li, the vice mayor of Yantai.

Hong Kong has been the largest source of overseas investment for Yantai according to statistics from the city commerce bureau. By the end of May, 3,253 Hong Kong-invested projects had been approved by the Yantai authorities, bringing in $14.9 billion in contracted investment.

Hong Kong's current investment in Yantai covers machinery, electronics, chemicals, food processing, logistics, finance, real estate and tourism, said Yu Dong, director of the city commerce bureau.

Big Hong Kong-invested companies in Yantai include the China Resources Group and Shinnco Group.

"Most Hong Kong-invested companies have been successful in Yantai, with some developing into leading companies in their sectors," said Yu.

The Yantai government signed a cooperation agreement with the China Resources Group, enhancing their collaborative initiatives in advanced manufacturing, city infrastructure construction, real estate, new energy and energy conservation, environmental protection and financial services within the five years from 2011 to 2015.

Trade with Hong Kong has grown rapidly, to more than $2.25 billion last year, a year-on-year increase of 31.5 percent.

The trade is in jewelry, textiles, garments, electrical products, machinery, plastic raw materials and leather goods.

Business goes both ways. To date, Yantai-located companies have set up 44 branches in Hong Kong, with a total investment of $97.43 million.

Located on the east of the Shandong Peninsula and neighboring Bohai Bay and the Yellow Sea, Yantai is one of the most dynamic cities in East China. In 1984, it was one of China's first coastal cities to embrace opening-up policies and now one of the most attractive destinations for overseas investment.

A State-level economic and technological development zone, bonded ports, high-tech industrial parks, and a pilot e-commerce service platform for cross-border trade, support the city's dynamic economy.

More than 50 Fortune 500 firms including LG, GM, Henkel, NEC, Toshiba, Hitachi and Mitsui have set facilities in the zones.

"The room for cooperation between Yantai and Hong Kong is still large as the industrial structures of the two cities are complementary," Yu said.

Investing in a new wave of growth

By WANG QIAN

wangqian@chinadaily.com.cn

The local government in Yantai, a coastal city in Shandong province, is hosting a trade and investment drive in Hong Kong from Sunday to Wednesday to seek further economic cooperation for development of a new economic zone for marine and high-tech industries on the east coast of the city.

"The Eastern High-tech and Marine Industrial Zone will be a new and strong growth driver for the city's economy," Meng Fanli, the city's mayor, told China Daily.

"With huge geographical and natural advantages, Yantai has enormous economic potential," Meng said. "Hong Kong is rich in capital, talent and high technology. We hope it can play a bigger role in the development of the zone."

"The zone includes a bonded port area, a national high-tech industrial zone, an economic and technological development zone as well as the coastal areas of Laishan, Zhifu and Muping districts.

"With a total area of 600 square kilometers and a combined coastline that is 150-kilometers long coastline, the Eastern High-tech and Marine Industrial Zone includes the most economically dynamic areas of the city," said Yu Dong, head of Yantai Bureau of Commerce.

It is designed to integrate modern business, marine technology research and coastal tourism as well as a cluster of high-tech and environmental protection industries, such as marine equipment manufacturing, clean energy, bio-medicine, software and information technology.

A number of the world's top research institutions and universities have branches in the zone, including the Chinese Academy of Sciences, the Chinese Academy of Engineering, Yantai University and a Sino-Russian scientific and technological cooperation center.

The research and education institutions form a solid foundation that ensures promising growth among local businesses, said Yu.

Located in East China's Shandong Peninsula, Yantai bordered by Bohai Bay and the Yellow Sea, faces Japan and South Korea, making it an ideal international transport hub.

And with a 900-kilometer-long coastline, the coastal city has rich ocean resources, "which give it obvious advantages to develop a marine economy," said Meng.

The city has established a competitive marine industrial system focused on aquaculture, fishing, marine equipment manufacturing, modern logistics and ocean energy and minerals.

The mayor said annual revenue from Yantai's marine sectors exceeded 200 billion yuan ($32.04 billion) in 2013, a year-on-year increase of 20 percent.

Investor attractor

The zone has become a new investment hotspot. More than 600 deals for projects, each worth at least 100 million yuan, have been signed with investors from more than 20 countries and regions.

The 55-square-kilometer bonded port area alone is home to almost 100 international brands from more than 30 countries and regions, including wines, dairy and healthcare products and electronic goods. Its foreign trade volume reached $15.7 billion last year, ranking first among the country's bonded trade zones.

Foxconn Group, a Taiwan-based electronics manufacturing giant, has a branch in the area. The plant produces more than 400 million games consoles annually, which accounts for 90 percent of the nation's total output and 70 percent of the world's.

Backed by more than 50 billion yuan in investment from the Longfor Group, an international conference center and a high-end real estate project are under construction along the east coast of the zone.

Other projects underway include the 6-billion-yuan Shandong International Biotechnology Park, and the 600-million-yuan marine engineering research institute by the China International Marine Containers Group and a cross-border e-commerce industrial park.

"When all the projects are put into operation in the next few years, the zone's GDP is expected to reach 30 billion yuan, making it a new business and administrative core for the city and a pilot for regional economic cooperation among China, Japan and South Korea," Yu predicted.

Outsourced services sector hits new heights

By ZHAO RUIXUE

zhaoruixue@chinadaily.com.cn

Located in East China's Shandong province, the coastal city Yantai is building an outsourcing base for services that targets markets in the Asian-Pacific region.

"We expect more companies from Hong Kong to join us in developing the outsourcing industry," said Yang Li, the vice mayor of Yantai, at the city's trade and investment promotion in Hong Kong.

Yang emphasized that Yantai's geographical advantages make it part of two national strategies for regional development — the Yellow River Delta High Efficiency Ecological Economic Zone and the Marine Economic Zone on the Shandong Peninsula — which gives the city great potential to develop its outsourcing industry.

The city now has more than 260 companies involved in outsourcing data ware services, which have created jobs for around 50,000 people.

Last year, the output generated from software development reached 14 billion yuan ($2.4 billion).

Yantai has more than 1,500 companies, and these companies have great demand for the support of software services, said Yang. To promote the outsourced services industry, the Yantai government has built six industrial parks, as well as one national-class animation base and three provincial-level demonstration bases.

The city has 15 colleges and universities, providing abundant human resources. Every year, authorities in Yantai allocate special funds to help build research and development platforms and train workers for the industry.

Yantai's sound environment for developing outsourced services has attracted a number of big companies and organizations, among them, IBM Corporation, Inspur and the Institute of Computing Technology under the Chinese Academy of Science.

These companies provide support services for a wide range of sectors including shipments management, online office systems, financial services, education and training, data backup and animation.

According to the city's plan for developing its outsourced services industry, by the end of 2016, there will be at least 300 firms involved in providing outsourced services, creating jobs for 70,000 people.

The value of contracts to undertake outsourced services is expected to reach $1.6 billion by 2016.

E-commerce powers up foreign trade

By WANG QIAN

wangqian@chinadaily.com.cn

Yantai, a port city in Shandong province, is enhancing the development of cross-border e-commerce to boost its economic and trade ties with other countries, especially neighboring Japan and South Korea.

"As more foreign trade companies are using e-commerce to develop their overseas business, Yantai's cross-border e-commerce services have entered the fast lane and become a new driver for the growth of its foreign trade," said Yu Dong, head of the Yantai Bureau of Commerce.

In March, Yantai was approved by the General Administration of Customs to be one of 14 pilot cities for cross-border e-commerce services in China, the province's second after Qingdao.

Among the first batch of coastal cities to open up to the world in 1984, Yantai has a strong competitive edge in developing cross-border business, Yu said.

Its total import and export volumes rose to $49.3 billion in 2013 from $24.2 billion 30 years ago, statistics from the local commerce bureau show. The foreign trade volume from its State-level comprehensive bonded trade zone alone reached $15.74 billion last year, ranked first among the country's bonded trade zones.

The World Bank acknowledged Yantai as one of China's Gold Medal Cities in terms of its investment environment back in 2006, and it has continued its efforts to ensure the city is appealing to investors.

Currently, more than 93 Fortune 500 and multinational enterprises have facilities in Yantai, contributing to its competitiveness in sectors including automobiles, computers, cellphones, wines, ship-building and new materials.

As cross-border e-commerce grows rapidly, the local authority will prioritize development of more trade service companies and cross-border e-commerce platforms, Yu said.

The city now has 37,000 e-commerce companies, generating more than 100 billion yuan ($16 billion) in sales revenue last year.

A cross-border e-commerce industrial park is under construction in the comprehensive bonded trade zone. With a range of preferential policies being offered, the park is expected to attract some of the world's leading e-commerce enterprises, as well as their cross-border logistics and online payment service providers.

A multinational online cross-border trade platform is also being established to provide local companies with complete-package services such as customs clearance, trade financing, storage and distribution.

"The advantages of cross-border e-commerce lie in its lower costs, higher efficiency and less intermediate links. It will help more local exporters, especially those small and medium-sized companies, to better tap the overseas market," Yu said.

Beijing urges Hanoi to 'stop all disruptions'

China says oil rig operations beset by obstacles, 'underwater agents'

By ZHAO SHENGAN
zhaoshengan@chinadaily.com.cn

Using frogmen, fishing nets, floating objects and hundreds of boat ramming, Vietnam escalated its harassment of China over Beijing's legal oil drilling in the South China Sea, an unusually long statement from the Foreign Ministry said on Sunday. Beijing stressed the importance of its relationship and communication with Hanoi in the statement, but experts warned that Hanoi will continue such provocations to cater to the country's swelling nationalism and seek sympathy from the international community.

According to the statement on the Foreign Ministry's website, "As of 5 pm on June 7, there were as many as 63 Vietnamese vessels in the area at the peak attempting to break through China's cordon and ramming Chinese government ships a total of 1,416 times.

"Vietnam also sent frogmen and other underwater agents to the area, and dropped large numbers of obstacles, including fishing nets and floating objects" in the waters where a Chinese company's drilling rig was operating, it said.

Tension has soared since early May, when Vietnam challenged and harassed the rig's operations near China's Xisha Islands. Hanoi claims the rig is operating in its exclusive economic zone and on its continental shelf.

Beijing dedicated a large part of its latest statement on the issue to explaining the legitimacy of the rig operation and China's indisputable sovereignty over the Xisha Islands, urging Vietnam to "immediately stop all disruptions of the Chinese operation and withdraw all vessels and personnel from the site."

"China wants good relations with Vietnam, but there are principles that China cannot abandon. The channel of communication between China and Vietnam is open," it said. Qi Jiaqun, a former Chinese ambassador to Vietnam, said China has exercised great restraint for the sake of bilateral ties and stability in the South China Sea, but Vietnam's infringement will continue in the immediate future.

Pan Jike, a Vietnam studies expert with the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, said Hanoi aims to present a hard-line image in the maritime issue to cater to the increasing nationalism in Vietnam.

"Hanoi's condoning anti-China demonstrations at home flared up such nationalism, and the damage is irreparable," Pan said.

Deadly attacks on Chinese and other countries' personnel and companies in Vietnam in mid-May caused the deaths of four Chinese employees and injuries to hundreds of others. Also, a Vietnamese fishing boat capsized close to China's rig.

Vietnam acknowledged China's sovereignty over the Xisha and Nansha Islands in this note from then-prime minister Phan Van Dong to Chinese premier Zhou Enlai on Sept 14, 1958.

Pan said Vietnam, posturing as a "protector," is seeking international sympathy and "testing Beijing's response" by displaying unity with the Philippines, whose ties with China were also strained over the South China Sea issue.

The rig, which started drilling on May 2, had completed the first phase of operation and entered the second phase on May 27.

The two locations of operation are about 31 kilometers from both the Zhonglin Island of Xisha Islands and the baseline of the territorial waters of the islands, yet 246 to 288 km from the Vietnamese coast.

3 trial parks will harness wave and tidal power

By WANG QIAN
wangqian@chinadaily.com.cn

China plans to build three marine renewable-energy trial parks by 2016, to help speed up the commercial expansion of the wave and tidal power industry, a senior official said.

The parks will be developed in Zhuhai, Guangdong province, Zhoushan, Zhejiang province and Weihai, Shandong province, to help accelerate research and development in marine energy technologies, said Kang Jian, deputy director of the science and technology department of the State Oceanic Administration, on the eve of the World Oceans Day. Such parks will generate electricity by converting the energy of waves and tides.

The site in Zhuhai will be a wave park, where a 300-kilowatt wave farm and a test site will be built, while the Zhoushan site will have a tide farm with a 1 megawatt or more capacity and a test zone.

The one in Weihai will be a comprehensive project for wave and tide power, according to the administration.

"Once the parks are built, companies and institutions can research and develop marine wave and tide power technologies there and turn them into products," Kang said.

Because the parks are still in the design phase, authorities did not disclose the total investment involved.

Lian Lian, a researcher at the State Key Laboratory of Ocean Engineering, applauded the plan, saying the parks will be platforms connecting scientists and engineers with users, forming a complete chain from renewable energy" and development to testing and final application.

MARINE RENEWABLE-ENERGY TRIAL PARKS UNDER CONSTRUCTION

"These parks will definitely boost the country's science and technology development in marine renewable energy," Lian said.

The State Oceanic Administration's latest marine resources survey, released in 2011, estimated that marine energy potential on the coastal areas can reach 1.6 billion kW. The huge potential bodes well for the country's large appetite for energy.

As a newcomer to the nascent marine energy industry, China, the world's largest energy consumer, is accelerating its pace in exploring the ocean for the country's future energy supplies.

The 12th Five-Year Plan (2011-15) on renewable energy spelled out that by 2015, the country plans to build offshore marine power farms with a total capacity of 50,000 kW, helping lay the foundation for commercial expansion.

"Developing marine renewable energy will be on top of our work agenda in the coming years," said Lei Bo, director of the SOA's science and technology department.

But because marine energy technology is in an early stage, the large-scale commercial exploration of marine energy cannot be realized before 2030, according to a report released in late May by the National Ocean Technology Center.

Kang admitted that the investment in research and development of marine energy technology is huge and said the government needs to take the lead.

From 2010, the central government has allocated 800 million yuan ($128 million) for marine energy funding, sponsoring 93 related projects.

As one of the sponsored projects, the expansion of the Jiangxia tidal range power station in Zhejiang, operated since 1980, is scheduled to be completed in September. The annual capacity will increase by 200,000 kW.

"It is a good sign that the investment in the marine sector is increasing and the marine economy is playing a role in the country's economic blueprint," Lian said.

Despite Open win, tennis fans worry about lack of new talent

By SUN XIAOHEN
sunxiaohen@chinadaily.com.cn

Despite the just-claimed French Open doubles title, the future of Chinese tennis remains in jeopardy due to the lack of up-and-coming talent, pundits said.

Chinese mainland player Peng Shuai and her partner, Hsieh Su-wei of Taipei, made up for the loss of compatriot star Li Na's first-round elimination from the singles tournament, winning the women's doubles title at Roland Garros in Paris on Sunday. The victory cemented their status as the world's No. 1 doubles pair.

It was the pair's second Grand Slam doubles victory; their first was at Wimbledon in 2013. It also was the seventh major championship, including singles and mixed doubles, for Chinese players since 2004.

Still, the doubles victory only serves as window dressing because Chinese tennis faces a potential crisis without enough elite new talent emerging to replace the veterans, said tennis fans and insiders alike.

A lot of respondents on Sina Weibo's public discussion of the doubles victory were restrained in their comments on the impact of the doubles championship on Sunday evening, saying a singles triumph would mean much more.

"Congrats to Peng and Hsieh! But the doubles win won't whitewash the disappointing singles campaign this year, and this should be worried about," said a micro-blogging user who goes by the name Adam_da.

None of China's four singles players reached the second round in Paris this year, the worst show in seven years.

China's Zheng Jie, the world's No. 70 player, also expressed her concern on the game's future.

"Young players might still be able to qualify for the Grand Slam events, but it's hard to see them surviving in the second week (in deep rounds). There must be some pressure on youngsters catching up (the future of Chinese tennis) couldn't count on our generation," said the 30-year-old Zheng, who was eliminated in the opening round at Roland Garros.

Boasting breakthrough results during the Women's Tennis Association Tour and Grand Slam events, the trio of Li, Zheng and Peng were dubbed the "Golden Flowers" by fans after the 2008 Beijing Olympics, when the Chinese Tennis Association allowed them to manage their own careers with personal crews outside the State-run system.

While the veterans stand tall for Chinese tennis in the world, none of the younger players, either male or female, consistently plays on a high level to continue the winning momentum set by Li, Zheng and Peng.

The best Chinese players born in 1990 or later are Zheng Saisai, who is ranked 128th among women, and Zhang Ze, who is 207th among men.

Peng's former Chinese-American coach Allan Ma, a notable figure in the Chinese tennis community, attributed the younger players' slow improvement to a lack of motivation in the State-supported system.

"They don't have as much desire to work hard and to win as the senior group had," Ma said during the French Open.

"Training in the national camp, they don't need to worry about things like accommodations, hiring coaches and booking flights. Everything is taken care of by the ITA, and they feel like it's all to be taken for granted."

"Compared with foreign players, who have to work on their own, young Chinese players don't have the cause to fight for and compete harder," said Ma.

Photographers and journalists from 12 Asian media organizations gathered in Yantai on Sunday to start a four-day interview tour of the coastal city.

The tour, sponsored by China Daily, the Yantai municipal government's publicity department and Yantai commerce bureau, aims to enhance Yantai's popularity on the world stage by presenting the city's cultural, environmental, tourism and marine economy.

The photographers and journalists had just concluded a six-day tour of Guizhou province.

"They got a good look at the province's efforts and achievements in cultural conservation. Yantai was one of the first of 14 cities designated by China as part of the country's reform and opening-up process in 1984, Mayor Meng Fanli said at the tour's launching ceremony.

"Yantai is accelerating its opening-up process," Meng said. "We are dedicated to building a transparent, comfortable and convenient environment for investors around the world."

Yantai's GDP last year was 561 billion yuan ($89.7 billion), second among Shandong's 17 cities.

In Guizhou, the photographers last visited a private cultural museum of the Miao, one of the province's major ethnic groups.

Journalist Iskra Noriega, a journalist from a Philippine TV station, said that she was impressed by the province's thriving ethnic cultures.

"It is amazing that both tangible and intangible cultures are well-preserved after so many years," she said.

China seeks to expand imports from CEE

By WEITIAN
weitian@chinadaily.com.cn

China will continue to seek balanced trade with central and eastern European countries by expanding imports and promoting investment in the region, China's top trade official told his counterparts on Sunday.

"We will encourage Chinese enterprises to import agricultural and animal products, especially food products, from CEE countries, and help them promote their brand recognition in China," said Commerce Minister Gao Hucheng.

"Imports of these products are in line with China's domestic demand," Gao said at the Ministerial Conference of China and Central and Eastern European Countries on Promoting Trade and Economic Cooperation, held in Ningbo.

Trade officials from 16 CEE countries including Poland, the Czech Republic and Hungary have brought 180 enterprises to the three-day event, with products such as milk, honey, canned food and cosmetics.

Trade volume between China and CEE countries has grown more than fivefold since 2003, and Gao said the number could exceed $60 billion by the end of this year, up from $55.1 billion in 2013.

The Ningbo fair also marks the latest step in reversing the trade imbalance between the two sides. For example, in 2013 China exported $1.2 billion worth of goods to Poland — China's largest trade partner of the 16 countries — but imported just $2.2 billion from the country.

Both sides have been working to reverse the imbalance, and there have been some improvements. In the first four months of this year, China's imports from central and eastern European countries surged by 38.5 percent.

"However, in a broader sense, trade balance is achieved by promoting both good trade and investment exchange," Gao said. The Chinese government will encourage more companies to invest in the processing and production sectors in CEE countries, which could help promote their exports to China and other countries, Gao said.

Cooperation between China and CEE countries will also highlight infrastructure projects such as high-speed railway, nuclear power and ports, according to Gao.

Sunday's event follows a meeting last November between Chinese Premier Li Keqiang and leaders of CEE countries in the Romanian capital of Bucharest, which saw the signing of a cooperation guideline to boost trade and investment exchanges between China and CEE countries.

Trade promotion organizations from China and CEE countries agreed on Sunday to meet in Ningbo every three years and establish a regular mechanism to strengthen economic ties.

"China is getting richer and richer, and we see possibilities for entering the upper-class market with our quality goods at moderate prices," said Mantas Nocius, managing director of Enterprise Lithuania, a trade promotion organization owned by the Lithuanian government.

"We know that we have to try hard, because so far most successful European products in the Romanian market are Chinese products, and we're entering in a different market segment."

"I went to local supermarkets, and they seem to be even better than most European markets," he said.

"We're active in the European and Russian markets, but we need to know how to deal with cultural differences in such a huge market like China."

Food fair boosts international image

Yantai showcases fruit and vegetables to global visitors, Wang Qian reports.

Thousands of agricultural companies and representatives from more than 10 countries and regions including France, South Korea, Thailand and Australia went to Yantai, in Shandong province, in search of business opportunities at an international fruit, vegetable and food fair last Friday.

Themed "green, health and future", the 15th International Fruit, Vegetable and Food Exposition showcased more than 1,000 fruits, more than 3,000 fruit and vegetable-related foods, beverage products and food processing equipment.

More than 20 overseas organizations and delegations participated in the fair and brought their latest developments in fruit and vegetable production and processing. They included the South Korea Consulate General in Qingdao and the small and medium enterprise association of Wakayama prefecture in Japan.

"Held in Yantai every year since 1999, the fair has provided a significant exchange and cooperation platform for Chinese and foreign companies on fruit and vegetable cultivation and processing," Meng Fanli, mayor of the city, said at the opening ceremony of the fair.

"Over the years, it has become one of China's most influential expos in the fruit, vegetable and food industry," Meng said. He added that the fair attracted 1.5 million visitors and 2,100 major delegations from across the world during the past 14 years.

The foreign trade value was reported at more than $12 million in all, including $9.22 million in exports.

As China's major fruit and vegetable production area, Yantai's own products were a highlight of this year's event, led by its apples, which were given geographic indication status by the State Quality Supervision and Inspection and Quarantine Administration in 2002.

Statistics from the local agriculture bureau showed that 181,333 hectares of apple cultivation in Yantai yielded 4.95 million tons last year.

This accounted for 16 percent of the country's total and made the city the nation's largest red Fuji apple producer.

It brought in 12.7 billion yuan ($2.1 billion) in revenue, which accounted for more than 80 percent of local farmers' income.

More than 120 varieties of apple-related products received certification for pollution-free agricultural products and organic food.

Almost 20 fruit companies received the European Union's Good Agricultural Practices certification (GAP), which earned Yantai the name of China's green food city.

Yantai's apple GI trademark was valued at 9.4 billion yuan last year, which ranked top among fruit brands and second among agricultural product brands in China, according to a report by a research center for Chinese agricultural brands.

Cherries are another well-known fruit from Yantai, where cherry trees have grown for 130 years.

More than 25,000 hectares of cherry trees produce about 190,000 tons of the fruit a year.

The cherries are exported to more than 60 countries and regions, including South Korea, Germany and the United States.

Yantai features a complete fruit production and processing line. Every year more than 2 million tons of fruit grown in the city are processed into more than 100 varieties of products such as juice, jam and canned and preserved fruit.

With farming and processing strengths, local agricultural companies have expanded abroad.

Last year more than 300,000 tons of fruit was exported to more than 60 countries and regions, which accounted for 20 percent of the nation's total exports.

The city government has committed to making Yantai an internationally known center for fruit cultivation and processing.

It plans to have 280,000 hectares of fruit cultivation by 2015, which is expected to produce 6 million tons of fruit annually, said Meng.

Yantai eyes up a larger slice of the market

By ZHAO RUIXUE
zhaoruixue@chinanews.com.cn

The coastal city of Yantai is putting its efforts into building a brand for itself as "China's food city".

According to the city's plans, the brand will be based on food diversity and security and revenue generated from the food industry will reach 300 billion yuan by the end of 2017.

"We have carried out a series of policies to boost the city's food sector, aiming to develop the city into a heavyweight in both China and the overseas food market," said Meng Fanli, mayor of Yantai.

With the help of the local government's efforts, Yantai has a competitive edge in 16 food sectors including oil, meat, aquatic products, fruit and vegetables, vermicelli, cake, candy, instant foods, dairy products and condiments.

Last year, revenue generated from the industry hit 170 billion yuan, the highest of all cities in China.

By the first half of this year, 528 enterprises were doing business in the city's food industry and generated revenue of 84.24 billion yuan. Among those involved Changyu Pioneer Wine Co. oil producer Shandong Luhua Co Ltd, Shandong Longda Meat Foodstuff Co Ltd, Yantai North Andre Juice Co Ltd and Shandong Oriental Ocean Sci-tech Co, played leading roles in their sectors. Apples, pears, cherries and wine produced in Yantai are well known around the country, said Meng.

Photographers and journalists from 12 Asian media organizations gathered in Yantai on Sunday to start a four-day interview tour of the coastal city.

The tour, sponsored by China Daily, the Yantai municipal government's publicity department and Yantai commerce bureau, aims to enhance Yantai's popularity on the world stage by presenting the city's cultural, environmental, tourism and marine economy.

The photographers and journalists had just concluded a six-day tour of Guizhou province. They got a good look at the province's efforts and achievements in cultural conservation.

Yantai was one of the first of 14 cities designated by China as part of the country's reform and opening-up process in 1984. Mayor Meng Fankai said at the tour's launching ceremony.

"Yantai is accelerating its opening-up process," Meng said. "We are dedicated to building a transparent, comfortable and convenient environment for investors around the world."

Yantai's GDP last year was 561 billion yuan ($89.7 billion), second among Shandong's 17 cities.

In Guizhou, the photographers last visited a private cultural museum of the Miao, one of the province's major ethnic groups.

Insel Iskra Noriega, a journalist from a Philippine TV station, said that she was impressed by the province's thriving ethnic cultures.

"It is amazing that both tangible and intangible cultures are well-preserved after so many years," she said.
