Yunnan opens all its borders

By LI YINGQING, GUO ANFEI

The capital of Yunnan province will build a gateway into a city for China, opening up to Southeast and South Asia by 2015, according to the Party secretary.

The capital, Kunming, is near the border of Yunnan with Southeast and South Asian countries.

The parking lot of Ruili Port.

Opening ceremony of the Gateway Project in Ruili.

Kunming aims to be ‘regional air hub’ by 2015

By LI YINGQING and GUO ANFEI

Kunming has played a major role in exploring the Mekong River Valley and Gedong Economic Cooperation Program. In doing so it has increased China’s relations with neighboring countries in the areas of electricity, commerce and customs activity.

Yunnan has played a major role in exploring the Mekong River Valley and Gedong Economic Cooperation Program. In doing so it has increased China’s relations with neighboring countries in the areas of electricity, commerce and customs activity.

Yunnan is a showcase of Chinese culture and Yunnan as a manufacture and processing center and a transportation hub for the Southwest, as well as a major gateway for tourism.

It is believed that making Yunnan an economic and social growth in the Southwest will be a major economic cooperation zone beyond the ASEAN Free Trade Area (ATAFA), Greater Mekong Sub-region cooperation (GMS), and in India, Burma and Bangladesh.

It is believed that making Yunnan an economic and social growth in the Southwest will be a major economic cooperation zone beyond the ASEAN Free Trade Area (ATAFA), Greater Mekong Sub-region cooperation (GMS), and in India, Burma and Bangladesh.