Zhongshan has long-term relationship with World Expos

By ZHAO ZHAN

The annual charity parade has become an integral part of Zhongshan people’s endeavor to develop the spirit of fraternity advocated by Dr Sun Yat-sen, a native of the city, was the first Chinese who attended the World Expo in London in 1851, while Zheng Guanying, a successful industrialist and eminent philosopher, became the first Chinese to propose in 1893 to host the World Expo in China. The First World Expo in London in 1851 failed to attract any attention of the Chinese except Xu Rongcun, who was a successful businessman in Shanghai then. Xu handed over 12 packs of “Yung Kee” silk for the Expo in London and the产品 won a golden prize. In 1885, Zheng Guanying advised that Shanghai should host the World Expo to make the people rich and revitalize the nation, and help improve the nation’s education. In 1911, Zhongshan people initiated the first Chinese who attended the World Expo, while the first Chinese who attended the World Expo was from Zhongshan.

Zhongshan is a good demonstration of the nation, and help improve the nation’s education. It has now an annual charitable gala in which tens of thousands of people participate on every Lantern Festival.

The annual charity parade has become an integral part of Zhongshan people’s endeavor to develop the spirit of fraternity advocated by Dr Sun Yat-sen, a native of the city, was the first Chinese who attended the World Expo in London in 1851, while Zheng Guanying, a successful industrialist and eminent philosopher, became the first Chinese to propose in 1893 to host the World Expo in China. The First World Expo in London in 1851 failed to attract any attention of the Chinese except Xu Rongcun, who was a successful businessman in Shanghai then. Xu handed over 12 packs of “Yung Kee” silk for the Expo in London and the product won a golden prize. In 1885, Zheng Guanying advised that Shanghai should host the World Expo to make the people rich and revitalize the nation, and help improve the nation’s education. In 1911, Zhongshan people initiated the first Chinese who attended the World Expo, while the first Chinese who attended the World Expo was from Zhongshan.

Zhongshan has long-term relationship with World Expos

By ZHAO ZHAN

The annual charity parade has become an integral part of Zhongshan people’s endeavor to develop the spirit of fraternity advocated by Dr Sun Yat-sen, a native of the city, was the first Chinese who attended the World Expo in London in 1851, while Zheng Guanying, a successful industrialist and eminent philosopher, became the first Chinese to propose in 1893 to host the World Expo in China. The First World Expo in London in 1851 failed to attract any attention of the Chinese except Xu Rongcun, who was a successful businessman in Shanghai then. Xu handed over 12 packs of “Yung Kee” silk for the Expo in London and the product won a golden prize. In 1885, Zheng Guanying advised that Shanghai should host the World Expo to make the people rich and revitalize the nation, and help improve the nation’s education. In 1911, Zhongshan people initiated the first Chinese who attended the World Expo, while the first Chinese who attended the World Expo was from Zhongshan.

Zhongshan has long-term relationship with World Expos

By ZHAO ZHAN

The annual charity parade has become an integral part of Zhongshan people’s endeavor to develop the spirit of fraternity advocated by Dr Sun Yat-sen, a native of the city, was the first Chinese who attended the World Expo in London in 1851, while Zheng Guanying, a successful industrialist and eminent philosopher, became the first Chinese to propose in 1893 to host the World Expo in China. The First World Expo in London in 1851 failed to attract any attention of the Chinese except Xu Rongcun, who was a successful businessman in Shanghai then. Xu handed over 12 packs of “Yung Kee” silk for the Expo in London and the product won a golden prize. In 1885, Zheng Guanying advised that Shanghai should host the World Expo to make the people rich and revitalize the nation, and help improve the nation’s education. In 1911, Zhongshan people initiated the first Chinese who attended the World Expo, while the first Chinese who attended the World Expo was from Zhongshan.

Zhongshan has long-term relationship with World Expos

By ZHAO ZHAN

The annual charity parade has become an integral part of Zhongshan people’s endeavor to develop the spirit of fraternity advocated by Dr Sun Yat-sen, a native of the city, was the first Chinese who attended the World Expo in London in 1851, while Zheng Guanying, a successful industrialist and eminent philosopher, became the first Chinese to propose in 1893 to host the World Expo in China. The First World Expo in London in 1851 failed to attract any attention of the Chinese except Xu Rongcun, who was a successful businessman in Shanghai then. Xu handed over 12 packs of “Yung Kee” silk for the Expo in London and the product won a golden prize. In 1885, Zheng Guanying advised that Shanghai should host the World Expo to make the people rich and revitalize the nation, and help improve the nation’s education. In 1911, Zhongshan people initiated the first Chinese who attended the World Expo, while the first Chinese who attended the World Expo was from Zhongshan.